

Fandor and Factory 25 Jointly Acquire 7 Feature Films

By Sarah Choi | Indiewire
June 25, 2015 at 1:13PM

"Christmas, Again," "Uncle Kent 2" and "Stinking Heaven" are just some of the titles being acquired and released.

"Christmas, Again"

READ MORE: Kent Osborne Explains the Crazy Logic Behind 'Uncle Kent 2' and the 'Adventure Time' Connection

Thanks to the binge-watching tendencies of our generation, more and more streaming sites are appearing with exciting endeavors to uplift and distribute independent films and documentaries. Fandor is one of the leading sites in this endeavor. The streaming platform announced at BAMcinemaFest today that it will be teaming up with Factory 25, the Brooklyn-based independent film and music distributor, to release 7 independent films together. Fandor will release the films on its site, while Factory 25 will release them theatrically and through transactional platforms.

Some of the titles include Todd Rohal's SXSW Audience Award winner "Uncle Kent 2," as well as Nathan Silver's "Stinking Heaven" and Pavan Moondi and Brian Robertson's "Diamond Tongues."

"Fandor is one of the few like-minded companies that really care about cinema as much as I do. I'm really excited about working together to release this slate of films by some of the most influential voices in independent film right now," says Factory 25 founder Matt Grady

"We're deliriously excited and honored to be working with Fandor and Factory 25, two companies that push some of our favorite movies into the world," said Nathan Silver. "The fact that they're joining forces is a cause for total celebration."

Keep an eye out for more news and releases from the collaboration in the future.

READ MORE: Fandor Launches Kickstarter Campaign for 5 Original Short Films

Listen to the latest Indiewire podcasts

MOST READ

2016 Oscar Predictions: Best Picture

